Healthvision Provides Interoperability Backbone to Sandlot's Health Information Exchange

DALLAS – February 24, 2009 – Healthvision announced today that Sandlot, a wholly owned subsidiary of North Texas Specialty Physicians located in Fort Worth, Texas, is now officially live with their Health Information Exchange (HIE) and integrated Electronic Medical Record (EMR) platform currently serving hospitals, doctors, and other healthcare providers in the Tarrant County area.

Cloverleaf® Interface Engine, Clinical Portal and Exchange, and Healthvision's Identity Services, which leverages Initiate Master Data Service™, play an essential role in this solution by allowing the exchange to create a complete picture of a patients' health record viewable by a physician via a secure Internet connection.

This solution, currently integrated with Allscripts™ and NextGen Healthcare EMR systems, allows physicians to make more accurate decisions quickly because they are able to view a patient's entire medical history in one location with one simple request. Where traditionally, the physicians would have to make individual requests to various health care providers visited by the patient, Sandlot aggregates this information and through the use of Healthvision technology, presents a consolidated view to the physician.

"Healthvision products have seamlessly worked together to provide a solid platform to serve up patient data as requested," said Telly Shackelford, chief executive officer for Sandlot. "Our healthcare providers are embracing the efficiencies they are experiencing via our HIE."

"Healthvision is proud to play an integral role within Sandlot's health information exchange," said Russell Fleischer, Healthvision's chief executive officer. "Our interoperability solutions continue to provide solid foundations that organizations can build on to improve operational efficiencies and patient care."
